INTRODUCTION

A significant number of flood self-help groups have started up in recent years, particularly in the wake of the Summer 2007 floods. And with David Cameron's "Big Society" emphasis, the idea of empowering people at the local level has risen to the top of the political agenda. This has prompted interest and support for the self-help groups from the Environment Agency and local government. The Environment Agency and HR Wallingford now wish to encourage the groups further by holding this free Saturday morning training and information exchange event for self-help group representatives.

The event will include presentations from flood risk management professionals, the Environment Agency and local authorities and the Hanneys Flood Group on a range of topics from information gathering, examining options and constraints, legal rights and obligations of riparian owners to practical implementation of work. There will be plenty of time to ask questions and for open discussion and networking. Morning refreshments and lunch are being provided to attendees courtesy of the Environment Agency.

If the event is successful, it is possible that it might become a regular occasion allowing ongoing learning, networking between groups and exchange of ideas.

EVENT HOURS

Registration for this half day event will open at 09:00, and the meeting will close by 13:00. This will be followed by a buffet lunch.

We reserve the right to make changes to the programme content at any time.
